In the Shadow of the Sword seems like an attempt by author, agent and publisher. Otherwise, clear writing, entertaining presentation of complicated historical material and rich depiction of a place post-Roman Near East and centuries 7th and 8. Absolutely brilliant and highly recommended reading for anyone interested in Islam and its true origins. His message is tailor-made for a time when Islamophobia is a global fashion, and everything that is labelled 'Islamic' or 'Muslim' is looked upon with suspicion.

All of which sets a history of late antiquity with a heavy emphasis on the birth of a great word, but he really goes to town on it. Heraclius' victory and strategic abilities seem even more amazing than they did before, and it's even more tragic that the Arabs trounced the east soon.
