Most of his time at the Agency was spent as a political analyst dealing with Eastern Europe. In the final analysis, however, the most sophisticated security system is only as good as the people in charge, the best psychological counseling is only as good as the individuals doing the testing, and the best contingency or emergency plans are only as good as the people who implement. Cariens lays out the case that law enforcement and school officials failed in their responsibilities to protect students and faculty.
